I've stumbled across several questions in which the "Opinions" section is completely blank. Here are two questions that are examples of this: What are good books to read? Why do so many people (c'mon, even you) point out every little misquotation? I can't decide if these are to be flagged as "rude or offensive" since I'm not entirely sure what is considered "acceptable" in the "Opinions" section of a question. Is there a general accepted list of things that people can put in there? A: The general rule is that you should be prepared to back up what you say with facts, not just opinions. If you can't back it up with facts then it's a waste of space. While you could put something like
